TARGET GROUP: The course meets the needs of those engaging in, or seeking to engage in, a broad range of professions ranging from the civil service, non-government organisations, law, advocacy, regulatory affairs and international business. Individuals and organisations engaged in consulting, social services, public health, economic development and international development will benefit from this programme.

ABOUT THE COURSE:

The course of Economics of Development has been introduced with an aim to equip the students with the basic concepts of economic growth and development. The course covers topics related to economics, politics and history. It provides an insight into examining the problems, like poverty, inequality, population, etc., arising by focussing merely on economic growth in the less developed countries and helps in analyzing the causes of growth in such parts of the world. It is an attempt to enable the students to understand the conditions conducive to economic growth and also its deterrents. This would not only facilitate their knowledge of the contemporary issues of developing economies but would also help in a better understanding of the economic implications of the alternative development strategies and policies. By the end of the course, participants would be able to find interesting problems in development economics and approach them in a rigorous and critical fashion.
